In-Text Citations

In-text citations are short-hand references to sources which allow readers to quickly find the corresponding citation on the Works Cited page.

For example: To cite information from a book, use the author's last name and the page number.

(Last Name Page Number).

(Smith 82).

The above in-text citation is in parentheses, so it's referred to as a parenthetical citation.

A few things to notice:

- There is no comma between the last name and the page number
- Parenthetical citations belong at the very end of the sentence, so the period is on the outside of the parentheses

"Simple repetitive motions like raking... allow the brain to unwind, allow the psyche to decompress"
(Hellermann 658-659).

Signal Phrasing

Another method of citing in-text is via signal phrasing. This method includes the source's information in the sentence (page numbers always belong in parentheses).

According to Elizabeth Nunez, "Veterans who receive dental care...are 15% more likely to have obtained residential housing" (368-373).

Works Cited Page

Setup:

- Type "Works Cited" and center it at the top of the page
- Alphabetize by the first letters of each source
- Use hanging indents
- Maintain double-spacing
